AMUSEMENTS.

"Peek and His Mother-in-Law" are coming to the Paris Grand on January 23 with thirty pretty girls and all its bright and catchy music.

The Pittsburg (Pa.) Gazette, of January 10, 1905, has the following to say of "Under Southern Skies" which is to appear in this city on February 23: "One of the best plays dealing with life in the sunny South is Lottie Blair Parker's idyllic drama of reconstruction days in Louisiana, 'Under Southern Skies.' The play has brought tears and laughter to the eyes of Pittsburg audiences before, but a better balanced production than that which is being given at the Gaiety this week has not been seen here."

"CONGRESS OF NATIONS."

It is a noticeable fact that even at this late day there are some people who believe there is nothing under the sun, but there is, and Wm. H. and E. B. Josselyn's "Congress of Nations" is an entirely new feature and attraction. Nothing of the kind has ever been presented before and the machine which is used to present these actual photographs enlarged to 52 feet long and 35 feet high was invented, constructed and patented by Mr. Josselyn and is the only apparatus in the world that requires two operatives in order to present 815 scenes, including 109 from "Ben Hur," in 2 hours and 25 minutes, divided into 33 different subjects selected from every space and corner of the entire world. Everything is exactly as advertised and open to your inspection. At Paris Grand Friday and Saturday evenings, January 21-22, Saturday matinee.

"BEN-HUR" AT CINCINNATI GRAND.

Klaw & Erlanger's massive and magnificent spectacle "Ben-Hur," which created such a furore in Cincinnati, O., two years ago is to be staged again in that city for two weeks at the Grand Opera House, starting Monday evening, January 23, special matinees are to be given on Wednesday and Saturday of each week.

The stage settings provided by Klaw & Erlanger in this impressive dramatic classic have never been equaled in this country. The pictures of "The Star of Bethlehem," "The City of Jerusalem" from the terrace garden of the palace of Hur in Judea, "The Interior of a Roman Gallery," "The Grove of Daphne," "The Fountain of Castalia," "The Chariot Race," "The Vale of Hinnon" and "The Mount of Olives" are remarkable exhibits of the scenic art. To these are added some wonderful effects in lighting, as in "The Star of Bethlehem," and instage mechanism, as shown in the thrilling chariot race. The contrivances that go to make up the chariot race cost more than $15,000. Eight horses run in full view of the audience.

The great scene which closes the play is the healing of the lepers on Mount Olivet. Here hundreds of people are arranged in attractive groupings, the whole forming one of the most beautiful pictures ever put upon the stage. The personality of the Nazarene is not shown in the play, but in this scene the nearness of His presence is indicated with the most intense impressiveness by a shaft of the purest white light. The dramatization is carefully constructed so as to remove it from the domain of the so-called Passion Plays, and while the Savior is only referred to, yet His tremendous dominating power is felt with thrilling effects.

The advance sale of seats for the "Ben-Hur" engagement will open in Cincinnati, on Thursday, January 19, when mail orders for seats for any of the performances will be promptly filled in the order of their receipt, if accompanied with remittance and self-addressed stamped envelope for reply. Address all communications to Rainforth & Havlin, Managers, Grand Opera House, Cincinnati, O.

Bent Her Double.

"I knew no one for four weeks, when I was sick with typhoid and kidney trouble," writes Mrs. Annie Hunter, of Pittsburg, Pa., "and when I got better, although I had one of the best doctors I could get, I was bent double, and had to rest my hands on my knees when I walked. From this terrible affliction I was rescued by Electric Bitters, which restored my health and strength, and now I can walk as straight as ever. They are simply wonderful." Guaranteed to cure stomach, liver and kidney disorders; at Oberdorfer's drug store; price 50c.

Give Us a Hospital.

It is strange that our people do not take some interest in having a hospital, in Paris. The matter has been agitated by this paper time and again, but no move in that direction has ever been taken. A large number of Paris and Bourbon County people go to Lexington and Cincinnati hospitals nearly all the time, and there is no doubt if one was here it would be filled constantly, for there are many that would patronize one at home that do not go anywhere now. Our doctors are the best that can be found anywhere on earth, and it is strange that they do not take some interest in the matter.

DEATHS.

—Mrs. Mollie Grimes, widow of the late Wm. S. Grimes, died at her home on Duncan avenue, Friday morning, of heart trouble. She was the daughter of Silas and Elizabeth Ewalt Hedges, and in her 63rd year. She is survived by two daughters, Mrs. R. C. Talbott and Miss Elizabeth Grimes, both of this city.

Mrs. Grimes was a model Christian woman, and loved by all who knew her. She was a devoted member of the Christian Church and her faith was impressively shown by her good works. She was a woman of means and known throughout the community for the many acts of charity she was continually doing. She was of a bright disposition and at all times had a good word of cheer for every one she met. She will be missed by her devoted family, her church and the community at large. It is the passing of a noble Christian woman, whose memory will be cherished until the end of time by all who ever came in contact with her. It should be a great comfort to her daughters to know that the world was made better by the life of their dear mother, and that she is now only reaping the reward of all true believers in Christ.

There was a large crowd of friends in attendance at the funeral, Sunday afternoon, at the residence. Elder J. S. Sweeney, her old pastor, and Elder B. C. Hagerman, of Lexington, each paying a beautiful tribute to the life of the departed. The pall-bearers were: W. H. McMillan, R. B. Hutchcraft, George Alexander, J. T. Hinton, J. B. Kennedy, H. Ewalt, Newton Smith, W. H. Nick, Wm. P. Hume.

—Mrs. Mayme Kenney Ferguson, wife of J. W. Ferguson, died at her home on Main street, Saturday afternoon, at 4 o'clock, of Bright's disease. She was aged thirty-two years and a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. M. A. Kenney. She is survived by her husband and one son, Wm. Kenney Ferguson; one sister, Mrs. C. A. Webber, and two brothers, Walter and Clarence Kenney.

We do not know how to express it better than to use the words of Mrs. Ferguson's physician when he said, "in her death Bourbon county loses one of its sweetest women." She was of a retiring nature, devoted to the home life, and admired by all of her acquaintances. She was a beautiful young woman, a loving wife and tender and affectionate mother and daughter.

Mr. and Mrs. Ferguson had only recently moved into their handsome and elegant home in this city, and it does seem strange that one so young and beautiful, with her useful life just budding, should be cut down by death. But we cannot fathom these mysteries, trust and believe in Him "who giveth and taketh away," and surely all will be well.

The funeral services were held at the residence yesterday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock, conducted by Elder J. S. Sweeney and Rev. A. D. Tadlock. Pall-bearers were: Active, C. A. Webber, Jos. M. Hall, A. L. Ferguson, James H. Thompson, Dr. W. C. Ussery, V. W. Ferguson, Honorary, Russell Mann, J. T. Hinton, J. J. McClintock, Thos. Henry Clay, Thos. Helm Clay, Frank Isgrig, Bishop Hibler, J. W. Davis.

—Mr. Thomas Durcan, aged 65 years, died at his home, near Centerville, Sunday. He leaves one son. Funeral services were held in the Catholic Church yesterday afternoon, at 2:30. Interment in Catholic cemetery.

PRECIOUS STONES

Investigation Shows That Mrs. Chadwick Dealt in Them to an Almost Fabulous Extent.

SMUGGLED INTO THIS COUNTRY.

Over $250,000 Worth of Diamonds and Other Gems Have Been Traced and Positively Located.

Only a Small Portion of This Was Put Up As Collateral For Loans—The Greater Portion Went As Gifts To Friends.

Cleveland, O., Jan. 16.—Investigation into the charge that Mrs. Cassie L. Chadwick smuggled large quantities of diamonds, gems and other precious stones into this country has developed the fact that the woman dealt in precious stones to an almost fabulous extent. In order to make a case on the charge of smuggling it was found necessary for the government authorities to trace all the deals for diamonds and jewelry made by Mrs. Chadwick, both in this country and Europe. The statement has been made by Collector of Customs Leach that considerably more than $250,000 worth of jewelry and precious stones handled by Mrs. Chadwick has been traced and positively located. It is added that this great amount of jewelry has been uncovered, with the investigation still incomplete. Of this amount the government is directly interested in about one-third.

To Collect Unpaid Duties. While the government is attempting simply to collect any unpaid duties on diamonds brought from Europe it is said that all information secured through the investigation will be placed at the disposal of Receiver Nathan Loesser and that he will be able to realize thousands of dollars for the creditors of the woman. The investigation has led to the discovery that only a very small portion of the precious stones and jewelry was put up as collateral for loans made by Mrs. Chadwick and that by far the greater portion went as gifts to friends and acquaintances.

The regular custom rate of duty on diamonds and jewelry brought to this country is 10 per cent. of the value of the goods. Figuring on this basis the government authorities expect to realize between $8,000 and $10,000. The rest of the proceeds from the sale of any jewelry on which duty has not been paid, will be turned over to Mr. Loesser to be distributed among the Chadwick creditors.

Nothing But the Finest Articles. It is simply the truth to say that Mrs. Chadwick handled pearls, rubies, sapphires, emeralds and garnets almost literally by the peck, said a government official. Testimony of experts show that the woman did not handle anything but the finest jewelry in the entire lot that has been traced.

According to government officials by far the greater portion of the jewelry is in the hands of innocent persons scattered all over the country. The work of informing these people that their claim on the jewelry is to be protested is going on. The anticipation is that practically all the people who have the jewelry will agree to a settlement without taking the matter into court. At the same time the government authorities as well as Receiver Loesser are taking steps to enforce their demands in the matter if so compelled.

A "LOBSTER PARK."

Big Reserves Off Coast of Canada, Nova Scotia and Newfoundland Where Delicacies Are Raised.

Toronto, Can.—There are parks of many kinds. Below we give an idea of what is known as a "lobster park." True, this is a comparatively small specimen; for, on the coast of Canada, a "lobster park" 60,000 feet square is in use. But the one illustrated serves to show the principle of the contrivance, which, for rearing lobsters, is so successful that more of them are to be constructed in Canada, Nova Scotia and Newfoundland.

The "lobster park," formed in some sheltered ocean reach, is made of stout wooden piles driven into the bed of the sea. At each end of the inclosure are open iron work grills, by which the tide can flow in and out. When the "park" is ready, it is stocked with hundreds of lobsters, intended to multiply and lead a life of lobster luxury until grown big and plump enough to be netted and served up for the table.

In the picture we see two boats. Every third day is feast day in a "lobster park." The man in the boat on the left is tossing bucketfuls of chopped-up fish to the lobsters in the inclosure. He at the prow of the right-hand boat is supplying these pampered lobsters with bunches of "choice" seaweed, which is also good for them. Each corner of this particular "park" is, we notice, furnished with a lamp-post, which, when lighted at night, serves to warn any passing boats of the obstruction.

AMERICANS POOR DRESSERS

Russian Lecturer Declares That the Feminine Styles of This Country Are Meaningless.

Chicago.—American women do not know how to dress, according to the theories of Mme. Lydia M. Mountford, a Russian traveler and lecturer, but those who are not wholly blind to the inappropriateness of their present mode of costuming themselves will be able to reform if they listen to her advice.

The chief objection Mme. Mountford makes to American styles is that they have no significance. The women of this country, she says, pick their dresses solely with a view to making them harmonize with their complexions, instead of having a certain form for each condition and station in life.

The costumes of the women of the Holy Land are taken by Mme. Mountford as her examples.

Would Melt the Rock.

The proposed bore-hole 12 miles deep has brought out the objection that the great pressure of 40 tons per square inch would cause a viscous flow of rock material, making the feat impossible. Hon. C. A. Parsons replies that this idea can be tested by subjecting a piece of quartz rock to a pressure of 100 tons per square inch in a close-fitting cylinder having a small hole through its center. This pressure is that expected at a depth of 38 miles.

Remarkable Bell.

The bell at the modern church of Llandevaud, in England, a church built 50 years, has a curious history. The present building was erected on the site of a pre-Reformation church, and while it was in hand a local farmer offered to give an old bell which was in one of his barns. The offer was gladly accepted, and the bell turned out to be the original one from old Llandevaud, which after some 300 years' silence once more calls the people to church.

Pope Still Loves France.

Cardinal Richard, archbishop of Paris, has given out a letter from Pope Pius X., in which the pontiff says: "Neither will the bitterness of the offense be able to turn us from love of your nation, nor will the progress of the offense ever make us despair of a return to better conditions."

An Expensive Wall.

At the sale of the estate of the late Whitaker Wright, at Tokenhouse Yard the other day, some one offered £90,000. "The wall around the estate cost £37,000," said the auctioneer.

FANATIC PATRIOT.

Gessler Rosseau Confessed That He Attempted to Blow Up the Frederick Statue.

UNDER ARREST IN PHILADELPHIA.

He Also Admitted He Sent a Trunk Containing an Infernal Machine to a British Steamer.

As a Reason For These Attempted Outrages the Man Said: "There Are Too Many Foreign Affairs in This Country."

Philadelphia, Jan. 16.—Gessler Rosseau, who was arrested in this city with an infernal machine in his possession, admitted to the police that he is the man who attempted to destroy the statue of Frederick the Great in Washington last Tuesday and also that it was he who sent the trunk containing an infernal machine to the British tramp ship Umbria, in New York, in May, 1903. The prisoner, whose right name is not known, made these admissions in the office of Capt. Donaghy, of the Philadelphia detective bureau, after he had been identified by persons brought here from New York and Washington for that purpose. He gives no reasons for the attempted outrages except that "There are too many foreign affairs in this country."

After having Rosseau under fire all afternoon, the police classed him as an "American patriotic fanatic." The prisoner gave no information voluntarily to the police, he admitting only those things which the police had fastened on him.

Wanted in New York and Washington.

Both the Washington and New York authorities want the man, and it is probable that he will be turned over to the police of the latter city.

The apprehension of Rosseau was due to the disappearance of Owen Kelly, a wealthy Irish American, who is prominent in Irish American societies in this country. Kelly disappeared on October 25 and from time to time the newspapers, particularly of the east, have published articles on the mysterious disappearance. These, the police believe, undoubtedly attracted Rosseau's attention. The other day he called on Patrick Kelly, the brother of the missing man, and offered to take him to his brother in New York for $500. He said he and Owen Kelly belonged to secret societies that were organized for the purpose of blowing up British ships in American ports.

The valise he carried, he said, contained explosives. Patrick Kelly notified the police and Rosseau was taken into custody. The valise contained an infernal machine of the clock arrangement variety, but no explosives. About the machine was wrapped a Washington newspaper. This gave the police the clue that he might know something of the explosion at the statue of Frederick the Great, and his picture was taken and sent to both the Washington and New York authorities. In the meantime he was also suspected of knowing something of the steamship Umbria incident.

Fully Identified.

Capt. Robert Boardman, of the Washington detective force, and Alfred Carter, colored, and George H. Hazel, cabman of Washington, who saw the man who attempted to blow up the statue, and Detective Sergt. Arthur Carey, of New York, and a Mrs. Curry, who keeps a boarding house in the latter city, arrived here for the purpose of identifying the prisoner.

Having satisfied themselves beyond doubt that the identification was complete, the police officials of the three cities set to work in obtaining a confession from the prisoner. He said he had manufactured the infernal machine himself and that it consisted of a candle, fuse and "dynamite mine." Where he made it he would not say. It was his intention, he said, to blow up the statue at night because he did not want to hurt anybody. Because of the ice in the Potomac river he failed to find any one who would row him from Seventh street wharf, Washington, to the arsenal, which is on one bank of the river, and he had to change his plans. The failure to destroy the statue, he said, must have been due to the melting tallow spoiling the fuse or interfering with the dynamite. Rosseau then gave the police the interesting information that he had intended making a second attempt to blow up the statue, this time with a clock machine.

Well Known in Chicago.

Chicago, Jan. 16.—"Gessler Rosseau," who was arrested in Philadelphia, is well known to the Chicago police. He lived under the name of Russell at 257 Washington boulevard, where he had his workshop. As far back as 1886 Russell came under the notice of the police. In November, 1902, he was under surveillance because of his apparent activity in manufacturing. He seemed well supplied with money and paid liberally for everything he bought.

MATTER OF "MAKING UP."

The "Artificialized" Woman Is Preferred by Foreigners But Not by Americans.

A recent newspaper account rather inconsiderately spoke of a matron of the smart set as "marvelously made up." That, of course, was not written by the society chronicler. He, perforce, is a man of eyes and depthless appreciation. He is never a critic by any mischance and so must be happy to a degree, says the New York Evening Telegram.

An out-of-town observer who visited the opera one brilliant night declared that some of the beauties of Belgravia so far excelled the stage artists in "make-up" as to raise the art almost to a divine plane. A cosmopolitan Englishman comes forward with his testimony, saying that he was struck by the number of "artificialized" women he saw in New York. Close scrutiny of the material which passed before his eyes might lead to interesting conclusions.

It is safe to say that these conditions variously observed are purely local and are in no wise true of the great body of American women. Vanity knows no geographical limit, and what is true of one woman of an advanced civilization is likely to be true of another when it comes to dress, ornamentation and the legerdemain of the toilet. Still, it may be said that the average American woman is freer from the abuse of these things than any of her sisters across the water.

An English novelist, and a woman at that, has asserted that the "made-up" woman invariably reigns supreme despite the rulings of moralists and the prevalent superstition that the sweet, gentle woman who is neat in her dress and nothing more is really man's ideal. That certainly does not hold true on this side of the water, where the type of woman is steadily approximating a higher standard of health, grace and beauty.

A man who prefers a painted doll to a wholesome, healthful woman has degenerated into a second childhood. He would prefer a painted woodland scene to an actual soul-resting forest with its fairy variations of light and shade; a phonographic ragtime song to the full-throated notes of the world's greatest singers. Some men like caviare, others can't bear the sight of it. "Beauty unadorned adorns itself" is poetically perfect, but yet should be so modified as to meet fashionable conditions if beauty has no other merit than its own sweet self. Distinction is the adroit touch that transforms the dross into gold.

AVERSION TO TALL HATS.

Smashing of Them Has Been the First Impulse of the Mob for Generations.

Since its invention in the early part of the fifteenth century the hat has been the easy mark of brutal assault. The smashing of hats is the first symptom of a riot, says the Philadelphia Ledger. The man who sallies forth with a silk tile that has come down from a former generation is the butt of the ribald jest and of the bad boy's missile. If, perchance, a straw hat makes its appearance when the frost is on the pumpkin it fomenters the mob spirit.

Why the universal contempt for this innocent article of male attire? A diligent search in "English Notes and Queries," which professes to trace the origin of everything, fails to answer the question, though that omniscient publication has much to say about "Antipathy to Hats." It is noted that during the carnival at Rome the dislike of hats constitutes the chief amusement. Anyone entering the Corso wearing a hat of high or low estate is a mark for the crowd to pelt and maltreat. A Dublin mob shows a decided aversion to tall hats. In former times at the lord mayor's show in London the roughs found unbounded entertainment in pulling the hats off the heads of anyone who had the temerity to wear them.

Perhaps the antipathy of the mob to reputable headgear lies in the fact that it is one of the accepted signs of respectability. Oliver Wendell Holmes observes in his playful way that the decay of one's fortune shows itself first at the extremities. The run-down heel and the forlorn hat are the insignia of tramping. If one can afford a presentable hat one is likely soon to buy a stylish coat, a luminous vest and creased trousers. Like the possessor of the great Hogarty diamond, the wearer of a shining hat must live up to it. A fine hat is the capital of the Corinthian pillar of respectability, so to speak. Hence the ire of the mob and the social leveler.

Nevertheless, something is to be said for the old hat. It may not possess the grace of the tile of recent vintage, but it is comfortable and democratic. It belongs to the majority.

TOOK A ROUNDABOUT ROAD

Groundless Alarm of an Unfortunate Traveler on a Forbidding Night.

The phrase "race suicide," it is sometimes asserted, did not originate in the white house, but in the University of Nebraska. Prof. Edward A. Ross is said to be the author of this phrase, relates the Cincinnati Enquirer.

Prof. Ross holds the chair of sociology in the Nebraska college. Some ten years ago he taught at Cornell. One of his friends said of him the other day: "When Ross was teaching at Cornell he had a strange adventure one snowy night."

"He had been out of town, and on the midnight train he returned to Ithaca. It was very cold, and the air was full of snowflakes. None of the electric cars were running. Poor Prof. Ross had to set out for home on foot."

"Well muffled, his hands in his pockets, he trudged along the silent streets, through the soft, fresh snow. No one was to be seen. It was a lonely and forbidding night."

"Suddenly he heard behind him the sound of footsteps. He looked back, but could see nothing through the blinding snow. He stopped. The footsteps stopped. He went on again, and again the stealthy footing in the rear was to be heard."

"Lonelier and lonelier the road became. The footsteps grew louder. The professor could now discern the figure following him—a stalwart figure, carrying a heavy club. In considerable perplexity Prof. Ross kept on. A lonely cemetery lay on the right, and he entered it."

"Now, beyond question, he would learn whether or no this person was following him. He trudged knee-deep in snow up one path and down another, then he hid behind a tall white marble shaft."

"The man with the cudgel still followed. He stopped and peered about cautiously. All of a sudden Prof. Ross confronted him."

"What do you mean, he said, 'by following me in this fashion?'"

"Why," said the other in a gentle voice, "I am about to visit the Smiths, and they told me at the depot that if I would keep behind you I would reach their home all right, as you live next door to them. Do you always take this roundabout way home?"

TOBACCO RAISED IN SOUTH

Eight States Yield 75 Per Cent. of the Nation's Entire Crop.

There are 26 states of the union reporting fractions of the country's commercial tobacco crop, and as these reports cover portions of New England and northerly portions of the middle west—notably Wisconsin—it cannot be said that climate sets arbitrary limits to the growing of the plant, such is the variation in its character and habitat. However, the south is preeminent in tobacco production, and when this is said it may be added that Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Tennessee and Kentucky produce an average of 75 per cent. of the commercial crop, the percentage holding good as to the number of acres devoted to the plant, the number of pounds of farm product and the farm value of that product.

In 1903 Virginia produced 120,913,500 pounds on 162,300 acres; North Carolina, 134,728,506 pounds on 214,878 acres; South Carolina, 24,490,890 pounds on 40,149 acres; Georgia, 1,299,200 pounds on 2,030 acres; Alabama, 254,745 pounds on 629 acres; Mississippi, 84,336 pounds on 168 acres; Tennessee, 49,838,600 pounds on 71,198 acres, and Kentucky, 267,260,160 pounds on 338,304 acres, making total of 829,656 acres cultivated and 589,869,937 pounds produced, which product was valued at $37,339,913.

This was the farm value, which should not be confounded with export or other values. The various handlings, gradings and other manipulations to which the crop is subjected add greatly to the value of leaf tobacco in its journey from producer to consumer, more noticeably perhaps than is the case with any other important farm crop.

Dodging a Tender Subject.

The late Joseph C. Hendrix was clever at keeping his maimed hand concealed. One day a man who had been his chum in boyhood asked bluntly:

"Joe, I've wanted to know all my life how you lost your fingers. Won't you tell me?"

Hendrix replied: "I will tell you on one condition, that you accept my answer as I give it, and never mention the subject again as long as you live. Do you agree?"

"Certainly."

"Well, they were bitten off."

"Bitten off! What—who?"

"Stop! You agreed never to mention the subject again. You have had my answer."—N. Y. Herald.

PROVES GREAT POWER

When Regular Medical Treatment Failed, Dr. Williams' Pink Pills Cured Her Rheumatism.

Hundreds of people afflicted with rheumatism have spent years under the care of excellent physicians in vain. Then they have settled down to the conviction that it is fastened on them for life. Mrs. Dinsmore was not willing to join the ranks of the hopeless merely because her doctor did not know how to help her. Here is her story:

"Four years ago I suffered greatly with rheumatism in my hands and knees. After I had been sitting a while my limbs seemed so heavy I could hardly walk on the first attempt. So long as I kept moving I was all right, but just as soon as I stopped, something seemed to settle in my knees and make them ache. My hands were so bad I couldn't touch the palms of them on a flat surface; they were swollen and pained so."

"Did you call in a physician?"

"I doctored steadily for over a year; then one doctor said: 'You have taken medicine strong enough to kill almost anything.' Still, it did not kill me nor the rheumatism."

"How, then, did you get rid of it?"

"At different times I had read in various publications about Dr. Williams' wonderful Pink Pills for Pale People, and I finally decided to try them. I took them steadily for four months in accordance with the directions. By that time I was completely cured."

"Have you been free from it ever since?"

"Since then I have had but one slight return of my trouble, and a box or two of the same pills made me all right again."

Mrs. F. A. Dinsmore lives in hearty enjoyment of her recovered health at Woburn, Mass., entirely freed from the grave anxieties that rheumatism always brings. When it appears in but a single joint it shows that the blood is in a faulty state in the whole body. It may at any moment break out elsewhere, and one of the dangers is that it may break out in the heart and then the result must be fatal. The only security is to keep the blood all the time in a perfectly sound condition.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills make healthy blood. All other relief is superficial. This is thorough. These pills are sold by all druggists.

JEST AND JOLLITY.

Softleigh—I say, doctah, do you—aw—think I have the brain fever?

Doctor—No, indeed; but you have the fever, all right.

"Did you ever attend a cooking school?" asked the Chicago girl.

"No," replied her Boston cousin, "but I graduated from a college of gastronomy."

"I manage to keep my boarders longer than you do," said the first landlady.

"Oh, I don't know," rejoined the other. "You keep them so thin that they look longer than they really are."

"You are sweet enough to eat," said the very young man who imagined he had the love market cornered.

"Thanks," rejoined the matter-of-fact maid. "There's a small restaurant just around the corner."

"I'm afraid you're not very wise," said the fair girl.

"Why?" demanded the persistent suitor.

"Because 'a word to the wise is sufficient' and I have said 'No' to you."

"Yes, but I'm wise enough to know that a woman's 'No' may eventually mean 'yes.'"

"Can't yer do a little somethin' fer an old soldier?" whined Tired Tiffins.

"Well, I don't know," replied the portly citizen. "If you can show your discharge papers, I may do something for you."

"I hain't been discharged yet, boss," replied the hobo. "It's a soldier of fortune I am."

MIGHT HAVE SAVED IT.

A Lot of Trouble from Too Much Starchy Food.

A little boy of eight years whose parents did not feed him on the right kind of food, was always nervous and suffered from a weak condition of the stomach and bowels. Finally he was taken down with appendicitis and after the operation the doctor, knowing that his intestinal digestion was very weak, put him on Grape-Nuts twice a day.

He rapidly recovered and about two months thereafter, his Father states, "He has grown to be strong, muscular, and sleeps soundly, weighs 62 pounds, and his whole system is in a fine condition of health." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

It is plain that if he had been put on Grape-Nuts at an earlier period in his life, and kept from the use of foods that he could not digest, he never would have had appendicitis. That disease is caused by undigested food decaying in the stomach and bowels, causing irritation and making for the growth of all kinds of microbes, setting up a diseased condition which is the active cause of appendicitis, and this is more marked with people who do not properly digest white bread.

Grape-Nuts is made of the selected parts of wheat and barley and by the peculiar processes of the cooking at the factory, all of the starch is turned into sugar ready for immediate digestion and the more perfect nourishment of all parts of the body, particularly the brain and nerve centres.

"FOUND."

Odd Notice in Prominent Southern Paper of Interest to Paris Residents.

One of the best known newspapers in the South is the "Guide" of Dunn, N. C. Its publisher, J. P. Pitman, send us the following clipping with request to publish:

"Found,—by the editor of the Guide, a bottle of Hyomei, the wonderful treatment that cures catarrh without stomach doing. We can speak in highest praise of its remarkable power to cure and relieve catarrh of the head and throat. This mention is made not as an advertisement, but in the interest of those who suffer the torture of that terrible disease, catarrh."

In sending the clipping, Mr. Pitman wrote the following letter:

"I enclose a little piece from my paper, issued to-day. You will see from this that I desire to push the selling of Hyomei as far as possible. I am using it in my own family, and find that it gives the desired relief, so that I take pleasure in spreading far and near the knowledge of this sure relief for catarrh."

Clarke & Co., in preparation for the catarrhal troubles of this season of the year, have ordered a large stock of Hyomei, and sell it under guarantee to refund the money if it does not relieve. The complete outfit costs but $1, and extra bottles can be obtained for 50 cents. Ask them to show you the strong guarantee under which they sell it. This remarkable remedy medicates the air you breathe, soothing and healing the mucous membrane of the air passages, and making a complete cure of the worst case of catarrh.

Could Pay National Debt.

With the corn crop this year, according to Secretary Wilson, our farmers could pay off the whole national debt besides one year's interest and have enough left over to liquidate half a year's expenses of the government. It is probable, however, that the farmers will have other use for their corn money than using it to pay Uncle Sam's debts.

One of the important attractions of the theatrical season at the Lexington opera house will be "The Sleeping Beauty and the Beast," which comes Thursday, Friday and Saturday, January 26, 27 and 28, with a special matinee Saturday afternoon. This magnificent spectacle was the sensation of London and New York when produced in those cities, and is one of the wonderful Drury Lane Theatre production. There are 150 people in the company which travels exclusively by special train, three cars of which are necessary for the transportation of the scenery and costumes. Prices $1.50 to 25 cents. The seat sale opens Monday, January 23, and orders by mail, if accompanied by remittance, will receive prompt attention. Theatre parties from all of the surrounding towns are being arranged.

Did You Know It?

There is no branch of advertising that yield as much revenue to the merchant as space in a newspaper. It is read around the family fireside and commented on, as to the place where to purchase bargains. The thorough business man or woman watches eagerly each week where inducements are offered. You hand a person a nice calendar and it is hung up in the house, not as an advertisement, but as an ornament. So with any class of nice printing one may have. If you have anything to sell, want to buy anything, any relatives that have been lost for years, let it be known in THE NEWS, and good results are sure to follow.

Unknown Depositors.

A Maysville bank advertises in the daily papers of that city a list of ten depositors who have an aggregate sum of $711.25 on deposit in that institution, and the identity of the depositors is unknown. Many banks are perhaps unaware that there is a law compelling them to publish the names of those who have money on deposit and are unknown. Some of the deposits in the Maysville bank run back to 1871.

Blackburn Denounces Beckham.

Senator Joe Blackburn denounces Governor Beckham in the interview given to the Washington correspondent of the Louisville Times as follows:

"I have no hesitancy in declaring my contempt for Beckham, his methods, his machine and his conduct of party affairs. I denounce them here and will do so everywhere. They are odious. They are ruinous, and unless this machine is crushed, mark you, it will wreck the Democratic party of the State. I want it understood now that I do not want that machine's support; I do not want its acquiescence in my re-election; I prefer its opposition; I want a seat in the Senate by the will of the people or I do not want it at all. The practice of succession in State offices and the perpetuation of a machine is not Democratic, and I submit the question to all fair-minded and honest Democrats. Now Beckham wants to be Senator, Hager Governor, McCheesney something else, and so on. I say it is not Democratic, and, by the eternal, I shall reserve to the end the right to protest. The Kentucky machine, as all machines do, is growing more and more odious every day, and will continue to do so until the thing is killed."

In a lengthy article in the afternoon dailies, yesterday, Governor Beckham vigorously replies to the Senator's salty talk. It would seem that it is war to the knife between these two distinguished (?) Statesmen. The substance of Beckham's interview is "you are another one," "go there yourself," &c.

By an amendment to the Democratic party law, which was adopted by the State Central Committee at its all-day session Saturday, the temporary presiding officer of any Democratic delegate convention who acts as chairman of the convention because of his position, is required to recognize in the temporary organization of that convention, the delegation holding the credentials which are signed by the chairman and secretary of the mass convention and certified to by the Democratic chairman of the county or district. This resolution was offered by R. W. A Horrible Accident.

Mr. A. J. Winters who has just returned from attending the funeral of his sister, Mrs. Louis Wolf, at St. Louis, tells of most horrible railroad accident which caused the death of Mrs. Wolf and a number of others.

Mrs. Wolf lived at Piggott, Ark., and desiring to pay a visit to friends in a neighboring town, about seven miles away, boarded a combination train, the passengers riding in a caboose. She happened to see her little 8-year-old daughter returning from school and called her to accompany her. While the train was standing at the station waiting for leaving time an engine came crashing into the caboose, demolishing it into kindling wood with several cars in front of it. Four or five persons were instantly killed. The wreck caught fire and before Mrs. Wolf could be rescued from the debris, both of her lower limbs and her right arm were burned off. She lived six hours after taken out and was perfectly conscious until death relieved her suffering. Her little daughter was up in the conductor's pilot house in the caboose and was severely burned and injured, but hopes are entertained for her recovery.

Mr. Winters has the sympathy of a wide circle of friends in the loss of his only sister.

A Cannon Cracker Causes a Death.

Mr. A. C. Martin died at his home on the Redmon pike, Sunday, of pneumonia. The indirect cause of Mr. Martin's death was a cannon fire-cracker thrown beneath his horse's feet on Main street, this city, on Christmas eve. The horse plunged and threw Mr. Martin out over the wheel, bruising and tearing the flesh from the ribs of one side. He caught cold and pneumonia set in, which caused his death. Some thoughtless boy or young man in violating a city ordinance is the cause of this man's death is claimed by his family. If all of our city ordinances were enforced, surely it would be best for our community.

Mr. Martin is survived by his wife, nee Mrs. Fannie Shropshire, and three children by his first wife—Walter Martin, the Eighth street liveryman, Miss Mae and Ernest Martin.

He came to Bourbon from Lincoln county and was a highly respected farmer.

Chicken Thieves Run Down.

On Saturday morning, James Ingels, of Clintonville precinct, tracked in the snow some chicken thieves from his house to Claysville. He secured a search warrant and with Deputy Sheriff Burke and Constable Joe Williams proceeded to search for his fowls. They found the feathers of Mr. Ingels' chickens in the house of Anna Belle Wood. Sid Humphrey and Wm. H. Williams, both colored gentlemen of leisure, were arrested and lodged in jail charged with the theft.

Will Try to Break the Will.

Mary Duke Wall, by next friend, Samantha Wall, has filed suit in the Bourbon Circuit Court against Chas. Wall, etc., to set aside the purported will of the late Frank Wall, of this county. Mary Duke Wall is the infant daughter of Frank Wall by his last wife, Samantha Wall, who had been divorced from bed and board of her husband. The will only gives the infant $1,000. His estate is estimated to be worth from $25,000 to $30,000.

Will Be Completed By June(?)

From outside appearances one would think the work on the court house was at a standstill, but a visit into the building show a number of busy workmen. The large court-room will be a thing of beauty. The plasterers will finish their work this week. The marble for the wainscoting in the halls is on the ground ready to be put up. Mr. Crawford, the contractor, thinks that the June term of the Circuit Court can be held in the building sure.

A Good Idea.

At last meeting of City Council Mayor Perry was appointed a committee to investigate and find out what it would cost to put in an electric light plant. A good idea, and would be a still better one, if the Council would give him additional instructions to find out what it would cost to build a gas plant. We mean a gas plant that would furnish gas not accompanied by the fearful odor that the citizens of Paris are now compelled to put up with.

THE LILIES OF HIS LOVE.

The lilies of the love of God—we know them far away. Whether it's dreary winter or the meadows of the May! He said: "Behold the lilies!—They tell not, neither spin!" But He took the little children, and He brought the lilies in.

When lonely, in a land afar, He went to where the poor were shelterless, and 'gainst the wind He barred the stormy door. He did not speak of prophets to make His work complete. But smiled upon the Magdalen that bathed with tears His feet.

"Consider now the lilies!" * * * think, how He gave the tomb its glory and its grandeur—its splendor and its bloom; When He came from Death's own darkness—from the valleys of despair. With splendid lilies of her love a woman first was there.

"Consider now the lilies!"—I wonder if, to-day, The final message came to me to go from life away. Would He not think of the sorrows of this bitter earth? And take me to His breast as them—the lilies of our God?—F. L. Stanton, in Atlanta Constitution.

A ROMANCE OF THE DAYS WHEN "THE GREAT LORD HAWKE" WAS KING OF THE SEA

The Breton looked stubbornly at the sailor.

"You are not my master, Monsieur de Kersaint," he answered.

"Answer his question, Jean-Renaud," said the marquis sharply.

The old man stared at the two gentlemen in silence.

"Answer it to me, then."

The lips of the old servant remained sealed.

"You dog!" shouted the marquis furiously. "How dare you disobey my orders! And to what end? Your silence proves that some one was here. Who was it? Speak, I command you! On your allegiance, by your faith, by the duty you owe me, I charge you. I wish to know who was here. I will know it! Ten thousand devils!" he roared, exasperated beyond measure at the man's stubborn silence. "Will you speak, or not? As God hears me, if you do not answer immediately, I shall pass my sword through you!"

"That is as monsieur pleases," answered Jean-Renaud sturdily. "Monsieur is a gentleman, and I am only a Breton peasant, but I have my ideas of honor, too. Serving monsieur and his son for 50 years in this house, how could it be otherwise? And my honor bids me be silent. Monsieur may kill me, I am his man, my life is his, but monsieur can not make me speak!"

Furious with rage the marquis shortened his arm and drew back his sword.

"Strike not, de Chabot!" cried de Kersaint interposing, laying his hand upon the other's arm. "What need? 'Tis certain some one is here. The silence of the maid, the acquiescence of this old man to confirm or deny, prove it beyond a doubt. There is no exit from this or the other chamber, if I remember the castle, save by the door through which we came. The man or woman must be there. Let us search. Honor your servant for his ancient fidelity, de Chabot. He would not betray a woman. There is some one here—some one in the room of the woman I love, the woman who is this night pledged to me. Let us search. That door, yonder? What room is that?"

"Monsieur," cried Anne, stepping across to the door, her face aflame. "'Tis my bed-chamber. You may not pass within it but over my body."

She had not remembered de Vitre, but she was on fire to protect Grafton. Yet it was a desperate, a hopeless situation. No matter, she would fight for him to the end—they should not harm him.

"Mademoiselle, assure me on the honor of a de Rohan that there is no one there and I withdraw."

She endeavored to speak, vainly moistening her dry lips, but she could not, so she stood silent and determined between him and the door behind which Grafton, his sword out, his blood up, was in readiness to make a dash for liberty. But his time was not yet.

"Enough, de Kersaint," exclaimed the marquis, "you may not enter those sacred precincts, but I, an old man, grandfather to this wayward child, may go anywhere. Stand aside, Anne—"

"Mercy! mercy!" cried the girl, dropping to her knees before the door. "Mere de Dieu! Help me, have pity upon me!"

"Oh, he is in there, then? A moment, de Kersaint, and you shall have him before your sword," cried the marquis springing forward.

Grafton thought his hour was come. But no, not yet!

"Search no farther," exclaimed a sharp voice from the other side of the room, as de Vitre, pale as death, threw down the screen and revealed himself. He had heard all, divined all. Anne loved him not. He would sacrifice himself for her, for her lover, pay back some of the debt he owed to Grafton. "Oh, thank God, thank God!" cried Anne, rising to her feet and shrinking back against the door-frame.

"Monsieur de Vitre!" the marquis called out, in great surprise.

"Capt. de Vitre, by heaven, what do you here," demanded de Kersaint, springing forward threateningly.

"Messieurs, I came here as the rightful betrothed of Mademoiselle Rohan, as the man who had received her troth in New France. Resolved to make one more appeal to her, I left the banquet hall to throw myself at her feet."

"Did you come by the invitation of mademoiselle?" asked de Kersaint.

"No, monsieur. I came unannounced."

"You love this man, mademoiselle?"

"Alas! no, Monsieur de Kersaint," answered Anne. "I esteem him. He sought my hand under peculiar circumstances in New France. I consented, subject to the acquiescence of Monsieur le Marquis, and when I told him of it he laughed at me."

"'Twas but a boy and girl affair, de Kersaint, not worth mentioning," answered the marquis.

"But he came here?"

"Yes, yes, monsieur," cried Anne. "But without an invitation, and, indeed, unwelcome. The mystery is now over. Retire, gentlemen, I beg of you. This has been too much for me."

The marquis started to speak, when something caught his eye and he stopped as if petrified. Resisting his first impulse to cry out, he slipped around to the table near the screen, and covering it with his person remained silent, his gaze fixed in cold suspicion upon his granddaughter. As for de Kersaint, he would let him fight his own battle; afterward he had other plans. De Kersaint stopped and thought a moment.

"You came," he said at last to de Vitre, who stood pale and haggard with folded arms before him, "without invitation?"

"I have said so."

"Unwelcome?"

"Alas! yes."

"Mademoiselle did beg him to retire," broke in Jean-Renaud. "I heard her."

"And monsieur would not go away," added Josette, who had regained her voice.

"Your attentions were not pleasing to mademoiselle, then?"

"No, monsieur, I fear not."

"By God, sir!" cried the Frenchman in sudden passion, "you are my executive officer, my trusted subordinate, but if I were not about to sail I would challenge you so that I might pass my sword through you! As it is, sir, you shall be dismissed the ship. I'll not sail with you, you disgrace your uniform!"

In his anger and surprise de Kersaint had forgotten about the cloak and the spy, it seemed.

"Monsieur," cried de Vitre, desperately, at this threat, "think a moment. I was mad with love for mademoiselle. She was my promised bride. Never had she permitted me a greater privilege than to touch my lips to her hand. No one would consider me. Her beauty crazed me. I forgot myself. But 'tis all over now. She does not love me. She has rejected me. Oh, monsieur, for God's sake, crush not a broken man! I ask no forgiveness, only an opportunity. We sail to-night. Give me my place upon the ship. Perchance some fortunate bullet may find my heavy heart. Monsieur, you were a young man once. If you love mademoiselle now, think what I have felt and find some excuse."

"Mademoiselle," he continued, turning to Anne with a meaning glance, "you will not have me, it seems. All the dreams I have cherished are broken and shattered. My heart is dust and ashes within me. There is left me but one desire, one hope: since I may not live and love you, I wish to die in France. I have done you some slight service, perhaps, in days gone by," he went on pleadingly, "will you not intercede for me with Monsieur de Kersaint?"

"Monsieur de Kersaint," cried the girl, touched by the plea, realizing that he had given himself up to save her and her lover, sorry for his misery, "will you not heed the request of Monsieur de Vitre? You were ever generous, kind. Oh, monsieur, may not that which has moved you to want—me—she stretched out her arms toward him—plead with you to excuse him?"

"Mademoiselle," said the count, looking at her with eyes full of admiration, "I can refuse you nothing. I can not forget this, but I can forgive Monsieur de Vitre. You are excuse enough for anything. By heaven, your beauty would make any man mad! Rejoice your ship, Capt. de Vitre. Perhaps there may be no more friendship between us, but at least you may do your duty."

"WITHOUT, THERE!"

"Thank you, Monsieur de Kersaint. Monsieur le Marquis, Mademoiselle de Rohan, farewell!"

"Nay, Monsieur de Vitre, I can not part from an old friend thus lightly!" exclaimed the girl, stretching out her arm. He seized her hand, dropped on his knees before her, and rested his forehead upon it.

"This for life and honor," he whispered, so that none but she could hear. "Think of me sometimes. Farewell!"

"Go, monsieur," she said, "and may God bless you! You have the gratitude, the eternal remembrance," she whispered, "of Anne de Rohan."

"Farewell, mademoiselle," said Kersaint, approaching in his turn, "may God speed the day when I may come to claim you again. De Chabot, goodbye. En avant, de Vitre."

"Jean-Renaud, attend Monsieur de Kersaint," cried the marquis again as they passed out. "Basilie, withdraw the servants and wait for me at the end of the passage-way by the staircase."

CHAPTER XXVI.

GRAFTON WINS AND LOSES.

AS the three men and the servants left the room, with an expression of relief so great that she could not describe it, Anne sank down in the chair by the table. She thought her lover extricated at last from his precarious position. Her emotions during the last few moments, when she feared that the marquis would discover his presence, and then when de Vitre had so nobly interfered in his behalf, had been almost more than she could bear. She forgot for the moment that the marquis had not gone with the others. She had not remarked his suspicious silence, his strange movement, in the excitement of the passing moments.

"Now, Mademoiselle de Rohan," he said harshly, "since this play has been played out and the actors in the little comedy have departed, will you be good enough to explain the situation? Will you tell me who it was that wore Josette's cloak; who listened in the armory; whom you have entertained in this room, whom you conceal in your chamber?"

"What mean you, monsieur?" she faltered, all her terror coming back again. "Monsieur de Vitre—"

"De Vitre is a fool," exclaimed the marquis angrily, "and yet I admire the man. He took it all upon himself like a gallant gentleman."

"Monsieur de Vitre told nothing but the truth, monsieur."

"Quite so," answered the marquis, with difficulty restraining himself. He was in deadly earnest, with the suppressed fury of his most dangerous moment. "Quite so. I have no doubt he told the truth. It spoke in his eyes. But did he tell it all? You answer not. But what need? Did Monsieur de Vitre leave this hat on the table? I have seen hats like that, mademoiselle, but upon English heads."

"Monsieur," stammered the girl. "No more faltering!" continued the marquis, pacing back and forth before her. "He is here. A lover in your room, an Englishman, and you have betrayed me, betrayed your honor; you—"

"Stand aside!"

He laid his hand roughly on her arm. She struggled to bar the way, moaning faintly. The door was thrown open, the hangings dashed apart, and Grafton, sword in hand, sprang into the room. At last!

"Monsieur le Marquis!" he cried, "release mademoiselle! By heaven, no man lays a hand upon her when I am by, not even though he be her father!"

"Captain Grafton!" exclaimed the marquis involuntarily letting go his granddaughter's wrist and falling back in great surprise, "you here, sir?"

"Why not? I love the Countess de Rohan, and, presumptuous as I may seem, I dare to affirm that she loves me as well. Indeed, sir, since the moment I held her in my arms five years ago in this very chamber at midnight, and kissed away her tears, I have loved her. The fortune of war brought me wounded to her feet in Canada, sir, and there I found I loved her still; and, what was more, I learned that she had not forgotten me. She left me behind wounded and ill, but I followed her here. Sir, I have come to claim her."

"My God!" faltered the marquis, as if dazed by this sudden development of the situation, "and I trusted her to your honor!" He looked years older at that instant, his face blanched and working. Grafton pitied him.

"Monsieur, I pledge you that honor that I left her as sweet and innocent a child as when I first knew her."

"And yet you came from her bed-chamber even now, and you kissed her at midnight?"

"'Twas five years since, sir."

"Do you love this man, Anne?"

"More than heaven itself!" she answered, stepping to his side.

"And you came to take her away, sir, like a thief in the night?" sneered the marquis, his color coming back as he mastered his surprise and regained a portion of his self-command.

"We had gone, sir, a moment since," broke in Grafton ruthlessly, irritated by the sneer, "had we not been interrupted."

"Mon Dieu, 'tis impossible you can love this Englishman, Anne!"

"An American, sir—"

"Peace! 'Tis all one. This officer, this enemy of France, this commoner!"

"Yes," murmured the girl.

"You love him more than family, than country, than rank, than station, than honor?"

"More than all the world, monsieur."

"And you were here alone with him at midnight in this tower? He kissed you?"

"Yes, monsieur, but I was only a child."

"You nursed him in sickness in Canada?"

"Yes, monsieur."

"Were you about to fly with him this evening, as he says?"

"Yes."

"And he came from your bed-chamber! Oh, mon Dieu, mon Dieu!" screamed the old man, passion, despair, wounded pride, quenched ambition, frantic rage in his voice. "The deep dishonor of it! This from my granddaughter, this from a child of my ancient house! An innocence gone, a reputation blasted, a character compromised!"

"Sdeath, sir!" burst out Grafton. "Speak you thus to your own? She is as pure as an angel from heaven! As I live, were you not her grand-sire, and an old man, I'd strike you down!"

"And I thought her," raged the old man, contemptuously disregarding him, "like Caesar's wife, above suspicion. Monsieur, you have betrayed my trust, you have violated my sacred hospitality, you have compromised my grandchild in the eyes of the world, you have well-nigh ruined my house. You belong to a race I have loathed and hated. This old arm, withered as you see, has used up its strength in striking blows upon your people. I would fain have your life, monsieur," he continued sternly. "Nay, I shall have it presently, but before you die you must cover your actions before God and man, with the sanction, the poor sanction of your dishonorable name."

"Monsieur," cried Grafton in amazement, "what mean you?"

"Grandfather," interrupted Anne, "I am innocent of everything except loving Monsieur Grafton. That I cannot help. I swear to you that I am—as I was—when you first took me in your arms—except for love."

"By heaven, sir!" exclaimed Grafton, "are you mad? Can you not see?"

"Silence!" said the old man. "There must be a wedding here to-night. Things are permitted a husband when he is denied a lover—wedlock covers all. Mademoiselle de Rohan, you must marry this man."

"'Tis the dearest wish of my heart, sir," cried Anne.

"Monsieur le Marquis," said Philip, bewildered, "what mean you? Do you consent to my suit, then? Heavens! 'Tis impossible!"

"Consent? No, monsieur, I demand of you, nay, I order, I command you, if there is a vestige of honor in you, that you marry this misguided girl, that you rehabilitate her in the eyes of the world."

"The world knows nothing, and there is nothing to know, sir."

"In my eyes, then."

It was a puzzling situation. Philip longed for nothing so much as to call Anne de Rohan his wife, yet apparently consenting to this ceremony he would be putting some sort of stigma upon her honor or her reputation.

"I can not, monsieur, upon this compulsion," he faltered hesitatingly.

"Philip!" cried Anne, who saw nothing of what was passing in his mind and who heard only his refusal, his denial of her. "You refuse me? You betray my heart? Ah, that woman in the locket! Oh, mon Dieu, mon grand-pere, kill me, kill me! He loves me not, I am rejected!"

She nearly fainted with the shock and the agony of the moment.

"Monsieur," said the old marquis, his eyes gleaming with anger and determination, "will you marry this girl? Think well before you refuse, sir. The hand of a de Rohan has been offered twice to no one before. Say No, and I kill her before your eyes, and you shall follow her to death. We may wash out the stain upon our honor in blood, perhaps, if not in marriage."

"Enough!" cried Philip, thinking swiftly of the end to be gained and putting everything else aside. "I take her gladly, joyfully, thankfully; not from any threat of yours, old man, but because I love her, and by giving her my name I will have the right to protect her from further insult even from you."

"Without, there!" called the marquis, stepping to the hall. "Ask Monsieur the Archbishop of Vannes to come hither instantly. He has not yet left the castle. Speak to your prospective wife, monsieur, if you wish while we wait. I can promise you no further opportunities after you are married," continued the old man, turning to the door.

Clock for Calculators.

Dr. W. S. Rainsford is a great salmon fisherman. Nearly every summer he goes salmon fishing among the Canadian rivers, in a wild and remote country where the people are quaint. One day in Canada Dr. Rainsford lunched with an aged farmer. His watch had stopped, and he took it out to set it by the tall half clock that stood in the corner. But this clock proved, upon investigation, to be three or four hours wrong. "Your clock is wrong, isn't it?" said Dr. Rainsford politely. "Not a bit wrong," replied the farmer. "It's you that don't understand it. When the little hand's straight up, it strikes ten, but the right time's five o'clock. Then," added, "you've nothing to do but calculate."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Real Suffering.

"Alas!" sighed the young widow. "It is the province of woman to suffer in silence."

"In silence!" echoed the old bachelor. "Well, that must be suffering, indeed."—Chicago Daily News.

Pa—Yes, indeed, my son. If you hear it at a concert or opera it's a violin, but when the man next door plays it, it's a fiddle.—Philadelphia Ledger.
